It is done with life." [Jean-Paul Sartre (1905-1980)] "A little more knowledge will do us more harm than good." [Samuel Johnson] "They tell me I have a face like a drowned rat." [William Wordsworth] "I do not mean that you should accept this view without argument." [Aristotle] "The hero as tragedy and the comic as comedy may be said to be founded upon it, as all other tragedies and comedies are." [Aristotle] "The fine artists shall not only paint, as has been their wont, feign examples of virtue and happiness; they shall also employ their power to paint the vices of men and the humiliations that they suffer from the want of virtue and vice." [Aristotle] "I do not think that I shall be scolded for writing now. For I do not write idly; the mind which speaks is always busy; and idle people are always scolding and angry." [Aristotle] "The mind is the tomb of the body." [Aristotle] "Words should be a sort of exotic flowers, for use only in the night, in the solitude, in the quiet of meditation." [Aristotle] "Nature is full of gods, but the gods are empty of nature." [Aristotle] "What do you see? Neither a man, nor anything that is like a man." [Aristotle] "In the family of man, there is a law of life that two must needs be equal, by nature, as well as in society; and when the two are not equal, one must submit to the other." [Montesquieu] "Books are not second-hand clothes." [Kipling] "There are two ways of spreading light: one is to lamp a place; the other is to remove a blotting-book." [Socrates] 3da54e8ca3
