Millions are at stake, so you'll have to be decisive, cunning, and decisive. You'll need superior team play, tactical awareness, and crazy brute force if you hope to save the day." The threat of war, a brutal dictator, and growing local conflict in far-flung parts of the world is laid out before you as Thunder Tier One. You and your fellow elite special forces are the only thing standing between the chaos and peace. Things are not good. Your nation is beset by political, economic, and societal unrest. The old order is crumbling, and nationalism is taking over. Foreign companies are displacing local businesses, "freedom" advocates are spreading their message, and military forces are being seized. To make matters worse, your international clients are sending in lower level support teams, some of which are being captured. Maybe you've heard of Marko Antonov, SBR leader, drug lord, and warlord? You need to get out there and stop him once and for all. It sounds like the worst job in the world, but there's a reason you're a Tier 1 task force - there are millions at stake. The fate of all people within your jurisdiction is in your hands, so there's no time to be sentimental. Survival is your only concern; you're answerable to no one but yourself. Luckily, you've got a team to back you up. Thunder Tier One is a realistic top-down shooter where you join an elite special forces unit that is tasked with stopping a terrorist organization. In 4-player co-op or solo, you must carefully select your gear and utilize all your tactical skills to complete each operation c9d1549cdd

Thursday, May 17, 2012 Update 11:00PM central 05/17/12 - My husband brought the results to us at 9:30pm, needless to say, we are quite familiar with seeing a third "not sure" ballot! We have moved up the date for our update, I'm off to bed. Update midnight May 16th - Our results are in - 64% (1,147) voted to stay, 36% (618) voted to go. There were 3 "not sure" ballots. However, an interesting trend arose - 5 ballots were voted to GAIN 1. Leaning them over to gain. As soon as I heard the results were in, I immediately changed my stance - jumping on the bandwagon in hope of GAINING! Now, I'm not making light of what percentage you vote is for or against the GAINING, just making an observation. Now I'm praying our taxes will not have to go up to cover our losses and gains due to our population. I'd be shocked if anything were up - but we live in a state of wacko land, so I could very well be wrong. This comment will be short and sweet...so buckle your seat belts!You've already guessed, but I'm going "in style" tonight too, no doubt if we're a tie we'll have an automatic 3rd ballot Update 9:30pm 10/16/12 - time ran out for you and us this morning - just as I was typing up an explainer to friends on Facebook I got a text with "Poll Results" and "Ballot Reports". My husband got done working - i handed him the blank ballot and told him to "Go for it!" - pretty simple for me to say, but what's that saying...what's sex appeal? ha ha ha...to all you that have voted today, you rock - I wish you the BEST of luck and FOREVER! Update 6:45pm 5/16/12 - Blue ballots are turning in my husband now! Background: The vote started in May 2nd - we start that time next year. Here is my third explanation of the terms we run into. There is a ballot that can be NO ISSUES or any combination of issues you want. The ballot is rather confusing because it shows the logo on the ballot. For example if your ballot says "Issues" your ballot says "NO ISSUES" This hasn't

Q: Expression tree evaluation behaviour I'm studying Expression trees and was wondering how the expressions for the ternary operator are evaluated. 1 > 0? 1 : 0; Should the result be 1? A: Simplification by the optimizing compiler might make it 0, see the documentation of Expression.Equal for details: Compares two expressions for equality. If the type of first expression is implicitly convertible (via an optional static conversion) to the type of the second expression, the conversion is attempted, and the result is a value of the second type. So the compiler might realize that int a = 1; int b = 0; 1 > 0? 1 : b; becomes int c = b; Combined PET/MRI or PET/CT in oncology: state-of-the-art. Nuclear medicine combines techniques of functional imaging like single-photon emission tomography (SPECT) with molecular imaging provided by radiolabelled tracers for molecular characterization of biological processes. Nuclear medicine techniques can be classified into functional and molecular imaging modalities. Molecular imaging is based on the detection of gene expression, receptor binding or enzymatic activity in a region of interest as provided by the targeted radiotracers labelled with positron-emitting nuclides. By combining functional and molecular approaches PET/MRI or PET/CT can be used for the assessment of
