Roblox Interactive, Inc. (also called simply "Roblox") is an American developer, publisher, and social video game network that was created in September 2004 by Erik Cassel and David Baszucki. Originally hosted on the website University of Phoenix, Roblox later moved to a dedicated server, as it started to gain popularity, then ultimately to its own domain in 2009. Roblox serves as a platform that allows users to create games and play them with others across the Internet. The games are written in the programming language Lua, and Roblox includes a skinning engine that allows users to design characters. Roblox's most popular feature is its virtual items, and one of the largest markets for Roblox games is Roblox merch, which includes clothing, toys, and other items. The platform also includes a virtual currency, Robux, that can be used for player-to-player transactions as well as in-game purchases. Roblox was made free to use in 2009, and its user base grew from approximately 4 million users to over 16 million in September 2011. The first games that users created and published on Roblox were primarily 2D side-scrolling platform games, but Roblox's popularity has grown to include games in a number of genres, including role-playing, puzzle, and sports. Roblox's success has led to Roblox hosting more than 60 events a year, including developer summits, game jams, and other events. Roblox has been used in a wide variety of locations, including middle and high schools, summer camps, military bases, and even space stations. Roblox's rapid growth has been accelerated by the COVID-19 pandemic, which has kept children indoors. Roblox has received generally positive reviews from critics, who have praised the platform's simplicity, user-generated content, and learning opportunities. However, many have also criticized Roblox's frequent scandals and controversies. With the help of Roblox games and the in-game economy, the average player participates in about 130 hours of Roblox per year. Roblox users spend an average of about 13 years per player, which represents three months of game time per person. A majority of Roblox's revenue comes from in-game purchases via the Robux currency. Roblox's most popular game, Minecraft, has over 700 million monthly active users, and Roblox has over 145,000
