Nikki Haley and Rep. Trey Gowdy, R-S.C., will play a key role in the federal investigation into the deadly attack on a U.S. diplomatic compound in Benghazi, Libya, the State Department said Monday. "We welcome them on our team," State Department spokesman Mark Toner said of the two former military officers. "We also want to underscore that the FBI is heading up the investigation, and that the State Department cannot and will not dictate that we take actions that might impede that investigation," Toner added. The appointment of the two senior Republicans who were so influential in the Justice Department's investigation of former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton will force the FBI to put the probe on the defensive or risk a clash with the Trump administration. The White House has also seen a backlash in conservative circles at President Trump's refusal to comment on the case, allowing Democrats to seize on the lack of a response as evidence of a coverup. Gowdy, a former federal prosecutor, and Haley, who served as the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations under President Barack Obama and as South Carolina governor, have also criticized the FBI's handling of the investigation into Clinton's handling of emails as secretary of state. Rep. Tom Marino, R-Pa., a former prosecutor who sits on the House Intelligence Committee, said the FBI has been "doing a great job," and that the investigation is "far from concluded." "The best thing that could happen is for the FBI to do their job," he said. The FBI's pursuit of Justice Department officials for compromising the probe in exchange for lenient treatment is also garnering increasing attention. The Justice Department's inspector general has already launched an inquiry into whether FBI officials improperly issued subpoenas of the State Department and other agencies and the FBI has been scouring State Department emails to see if officials inappropriately used private email accounts for government business. Gowdy and Marino said they had no knowledge of the FBI's interest in whether federal officials had used their personal email accounts for government business. They said an "obvious" way to slow down an investigation is to subpoena documents and witnesses, but they had no idea that the FBI had been doing
