After adding these variants, the game still leaves itself with the choice of 2.4 million free pool options, so you can have fun trying to master all these variants without getting bored. Perhaps my 3Dfx drivers need upgrading, but I think I have a winner here. If you're using Windows, the freeware from the 'Nils Külzer' site may be best suited to you. It only needs a little Italian translation and doesn't do as good a job as the official game but you get all of the extras included. It's nearly impossible to say whether you should get the Sega, 3Dfx or nForce2 version of Virtual Pool 2. Firstly, my experience was that nForce2 was a bit better in the original Sega version. However, 3Dfx are trying to sell this game for more than the Sega version cost, whereas Sega were pretty much releasing it to make a profit from. The reason you might want the 3Dfx version is that it does have 3Dfx effects, the parallax scrolling, and the ability to set controls so they don't conflict with your native inputs. What I did notice when using 3Dfx mode with the nForce2, is that the greens used are a slightly different shade of green, but this is not as noticeable as it could be. The problem is that although this is a free game, 3Dfx are trying to do a lot of their own heavy lifting and you've got to take their word for how well it works, and whether it'll work at all with your computer! Download Virtual Pool 2 at the poker101.com website for all options, and the real plus is that you can have 10 different games going at once. On my system I had all four core games going at once - as far as I could tell, Virtual Pool 2 has a good use of the memory.
