Many of these early upgrades incorporated the Layers Panel from Elements, which at the time was an insider's joke. Elements 5 was compared to Photoshop and the Layers Panel was deemed a joke. Mac users for years were stuck with layers being non-magical, non-selectable and full-screen in a window that was completely separate from the main program. Later versions with the "advanced features" that were supposed to be part of the product were all about that, yet the Layers Tab was relegated to a glorified panel organization for Muslims. Interesting.
