There's 0 minor issues. There's some poorly written feedback. There's actually a handful of new features we'd love to launch. We're not going to lift the veil, though - there are many new features to be found inside. And finally, one of the biggest factors in the upgrade is the stability of the app. On average, I found that we were seeing about one crash per hour. We've already pulled an update to the iOS app which has improved the stability of the app by 90%. Adobe, you really impressed me. Your Photoshop CS development is the benchmark for other users. I do believe you have delivered great vision with Lightroom's latest makeover, and when this mega update is done, all photographers will be happy. You won't have to say goodbye to what you have accomplished already. This is a great update. Adobe, your development always delivers and the latest version delivers a further step for modern photographers. You have had a chance to show us the new features but at this point I have to ask myself if this update is a truly effective upgrade for those of us with older versions of Lightroom. Over the years you have introduced many new features, and to a hefty list of them. Should this be your first outing updating current users of Lightroom? Rosy, your thoughts are so important to me. I am really excited about this new Photoshop and the direction in which you have gone. I compliment you on your leadership in this arena. This is no time for excuses. The digital arena is moving in a very exciting direction. As we continue to push deeper into the digital realm, we must make sure that we are all on the same page and on the same course. We should not stress about which way to go, but affirm our life's passion for the common good and the overall growth of our industry. In the beginning, I questioned the direction of this particular update. As of now, I am more than pleased with the direction of this release and intend to continue with Lightroom as long as you will have it in print or on DVD. I would say that the most common question about Photoshop CS5 is will Photoshop CS6 still be in the works. My answer is, "No, it will not." You're off course. The future for us is bright and your name in print or on DVD will continue to be a top adage.

I've met him in person last year and we've already talked about having a partnership. He's already assigned me a job, which is a collaboration, so he already trust me more than many people. It's nice to work with someone like Nick. He has a lot of surprises, he has his own unique style and style of storytelling.
